Tampa, FL (PRWeb) September 26, 2008 -- The time has come. Inundated by inconvenient truths and a complex new lexicon chock-full of carbon footprints and greenhouse gases, Americans are getting the message loud and clear. Man-made or not, the issue of climate change cannot be ignored, and businesses are rapidly joining the conversation. A perfect example is Boyce Systems' partnership with National Payment Corporation (NATPAY), which is designed to help Boyce's customers reduce paper office waste and save the environment, one pay stub at a time.

NATPAY has been helping payroll professionals cut the paper out of payroll since 1991. NATPAY customers already know that the firm's direct deposit service, EZStub paperless pay stubs, and employee paycards save money, time, and paper. Now that NATPAY has begun offering online customer billing statements, online payment options, and convenient back-office reporting features, companies like Boyce are using these new services to complement their own offerings.

As a leading provider of quality, high-performance information management solutions in Indiana, Boyce has also been inspired by the efficiency and popularity of the paperless movement. By offering EZStub paperless pay stubs to its customers, Boyce has increased the value of many of the firm's offerings, including financial software applications, print-to-mail solutions, scanning, imaging, and indexing products, electronic forms management, and mail processing.

"Offering EZStub enhances our business because it provides our customers a great solution for streamlining communication to their staff and adding efficiency. We like EZStub because it's 'Green Friendly' and allows easy access to historical payroll information, but the largest benefit to our customers is the time saved in processing and delivering their payroll information," explains Mike Galliher, Boyce's Chief Executive Officer. In addition to EZStub, Boyce also plans to market Doculivity, NATPAY's newest service, to those customers in need of a comprehensive online billing and payment service.
